

We are in an age with an excess of information and a supreme lack of order. Perceptions of reality have been muddled with notions of subjectivity, objectivity, and some nebulous idea of an absolute truth. We have lost order, not because of a lack of touch with truth, but a deficiency in the ability to construct a coherent narrative — the story of our lives.

Just to clarify, by "order," I mean clear direction for the lives of individuals.

I seek to provide order to my generation through the proliferation of my philosophy and by supplying my own narratives for others to glean wisdom and experience from. That is what you will find in this blog.
